In Nicaragua, even long before the arrival of the Spaniards the people have lived of agriculture. The cities in the past were small and modest, while the camp life was rich and full of emotions.

The past of each Nicaraguan begins with a family from the field. Despite this, the story of the people in the field is a history that is fading, people are moving to cities, children leave the occupations of the parents, and the past is something that is left in past.

The agrarian history of Nicaragua is a memory of our ancestors, and so it is important to preserve it and know it. In this museum we invite you to know the life of the people, immerse yourself in the past, and use your imagination to find the honest and hard-working people of which all Nicaraguans come from.
